

Abstract

This report studies the distribution of the estimated regression coefficient in a time series model by theoretical proof and Monte Carlo simulation based on a transformed model. Identifying the difference of the transformed model with the original model through simulation, bootstrap method is proposed to test null hypothesis on the regression coefficient of the original model. As comparison, another model is studied applying the same bootstrap procedure.